

Our Military's Embrace of the Occult

You can be arrested and sent away without ever having committed a crime.
—Line spoken by Pre-crime unit detective John Anderton in the film Minority Report

Have you seen the film Minority Report?

It was released in 2002 and is based on the late-fifties short story by Philip K. Dick, who also wrote the prophetic Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep?, which became the movie BladeRunner.

Minority Report tells the story of a crime-prevention unit known as Pre-crime in 2054 Washington D.C. The unit gets its tips from a trio of psychics, who float around in an oversized Petri dish full of conducting fluid and are wired to one another and to a computer that reads the images they “see” of murders that will happen.

Because of these ESP-driven visions, the Pre-crime officers make arrests of individuals who may not yet be criminals but who have been identified as crime perpetrators at some point in the future.

There's a catch, however, the research scientist whose work led to Pre-crime is rankled that the process has been turned into a political football. The scientist also knows that Pre-crime is an inherently fallible system because of the potential for human error and the fact that the design is flawed: the psychics, or pre-cogs, don't always share the same vision, and when this happens, the odd vision—the minority report—is covered up, never to be found.

Does this system seem implausible? Can we dismiss it as merely the figment of a science-fiction writer's imagination?

If you've read science fiction extensively, especially some of the classics like Dick's aforementioned works, Aldous Huxley's Brave New World, George Orwell's Animal Farm and 1984, H.G. Wells' Open Conspiracy, New World Order and The Shape of Things to Come, Anthony Burgess' A Clockwork Orange, Ray Bradbury's Fahrenheit 451, and even Ian Fleming's James Bond series, you'll come to the realization that either these writers were extremely psychic themselves or, perhaps, they had a little inside information about the real scientific tools that were in research and development during and right after the Second World War.

Few of us have any idea what the German, Soviet Union, and American scientists were working on throughout the Second World War and, further, few of us are aware that Nazi scientists—a group prized by both the United States and the U.S.S.R.—were spirited into both countries at the end of WW2 to continue their diabolical work.

Now let's consider the present.

The U.S. military has been involved with—among other questionable practices—the technique of remote viewing.

On the website <http://www.militaryremoterviewers.com> it is stated:

“Remote Viewing is the retrieval of psychically derived accurate information [PSI] about a person, place, thing, or event, anywhere in time or space, using a precise set of protocols which facilitate the downloading of data while minimizing mental noise, imagination, and analysis.

“Remote Viewing, as a trainable skill that anyone could learn without ever having a previous ‘psychic’ experience, was not a known innate human ability until very recently, when the United States government contracted Stanford Research Institute to develop a reliable PSI technology for intelligence collection purposes. The DOD's [Department of Defense] investigation into the usefulness of PSI was the direct result of intelligence in the 1970s which showed that the Soviets were investigating and employing psychics for espionage.

“After years of experiments, a brilliant psychic and artist named Ingo Swann, who had been the subject of much of the early remote viewing research at S.R.I. [Stanford Research Institute, a thinktank dedicated to the psychological manipulation of the masses] directed his attention at his own psychic process and modeled it. These newly discovered techniques in the early 1980s allowed virtually anyone, after intensive rigorous training, to successfully learn to effectively remote view with an accuracy rate higher than the best known natural psychics.

“Swann was contracted to train an Army prototype five member remote viewing team, which consisted mostly of military intelligence officers. The results were more than anyone had hoped for, and the technology was continually refined and tested against some of the intelligence community's most difficult national security targets. The government kept this a tightly held secret for over ten years, with a total expenditure of $20 million dollars on the program.

“In the mid 1990's due to changes in leadership, attrition in the ranks of the trained remote viewers, and attempts by some to clear the government of any potentially embarrassing programs (in the wake of Iran Contra), the program was finally canceled. However, in 1989, against the wishes of the then civilian administrator, a private corporation named PSI TECH was formed with the assistance of the former commanding General of INSCOM [U.S. Army Intelligence and Security Command], with the mission to preserve the technology.

Another site devoted to remote viewing, www.firedocs.com/remoterviewing/faq.cfm, states that remote viewing “by definition is not spontaneous, it is planned, and is usually close to the actual opposite of an out-of-body experience. That does not mean that PSI data cannot come via OBE, Lucid Dreaming, or many other avenues, of course.”

This stuff is not scientific; it's Satanic.

As is written in Ezekiel 21:21 (KJV): “For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination: he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver.”

Are we allowing ourselves to morph into the New Babylon in the drive toward victory at any price? Do we sanction the conjuring of dark forces for the promise of security?

Because, if that is what we are doing, then we have subjugated ourselves to a greater peril, a far greater evil.

And understand, too, what the military is using on our supposed enemies today will one day be turned on our population. Pre-crime is not science fiction, it is real, and, like the torture and the experimental weaponry our military is using on other peoples of this world, it will be used on us, at least those of us who finally awaken to the fact that totalitarianism, not freedom, has encircled us.
